ADDITIONAL LOCALS

The La Grippe is going the rounds again, just now, and a considerable number of people in the district are under the weather, suffering from a visit of this unwelcome guest.

W. Walker returned to Scott Sask., on Monday.

The storm yesterday did considerable damage around the town, the lumber yards being the worst sufferers. Most of the stores were closed all morning as very few people left their firesides. Several were noticed crawling across the street, as the wind was too strong to make it, in the ordinary way.

Two storms in a week is going it a little too heavy.

The school was also closed as none of the children ventured out. There was very little snow fell, but the drift was bad.

"And he for me," the elder woman answered, "we have smoothed things for each other, Daphne. But I agree with the remarks made by a character in a book I once read. She advised her daughter not to be a cushion for her husband; not to make things too soft for him, but to strengthen and help him. I am not really afraid you will be a cushion for Hugh."

"I don't like to be a cushion," Daphne shook her head decidedly. "I want to help Hugh to live up to the best in him; to fulfill himself in the highest way; to follow his noblest ideals. I shouldn't say all this to anybody but you, Aunt Mildred; she added shyly, "but you seem to understand."

"I do understand, and I think you are perfectly right," Mrs. Merivale smiled up into Daphne's face, and her hand touched Daphne's hand on which rested her engagement ring. Raymond's niece was very dear to Raymond's wife, and when the girl became engaged to Hugh Brentwood, the rising young doctor of Stanhurst, both she and her husband were satisfied that it was for Daphne's happiness.

The Merivale's house, Demberton Manor, stood about a mile and a half from the village, and close to the hamlet of Demberton which gave it its name, and Mrs. Merivale owned large tracts of land in the neighborhood, and his and his forebears had been squires of the parish for many and many a generation.

Mrs. Merivale and her niece were awaiting the arrival of the newcomer in the drawing room of the Manor, a delicious old-fashioned room which seemed to hold in its atmosphere the fragrance and charm left by those men and women whose names and faces had lived and loved, suffered and been glad here long ago. From the bow window, whose low window seats were Daphne's favorite abiding place, the eyes wandered over a view which Mrs. Merivale often declared was unsurpassed in the whole of the British Isles. The garden was in the foreground—a velvet lawn and beds and shrubberies which in a few months would be a blaze of Rhododendrons.

"DEATH IN THE POT."

"Death in the pot." That sentence connotes the end of a tragedy, a little family gathering. A fine dinner cooked in the large copper kettle had dissolved, and the entire family poisoned by the accumulated vapors. The story was told by the newspapers. The moral of it is, that the purest of food, put into a foul vessel, may become a moral of death.

If the stomach is diseased it is like the poisonous kettle, which taints everything that goes into it. The symptoms are irregular appetite, undue fullness after eating, distressed feeling in the stomach, flatulency and sinking sensations, palpitation, dizziness, ringing in ears, sour or bitter risings and constipation. Not all these symptoms may be present at the same time, but any of them show disease in the digestive or alimentary tract.

The intimate relation of the stomach to the blood, heart, liver, and lungs makes it a medicinal maxim, "Start with the stomach." It is upon this principle that Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery effects so many and such remarkable cures. It cleanses the stomach and the system is cleansed. It increases the action of the blood-making glands, and the body is enriched by the purified blood. It's a tonic and body builder that cleanses the digestive and nutritive organs and strengthens the whole body by increasing the quantity and quality of its nourishment. It carries off the poisonous, effete matter. In this way it re-establishes health, banishing the bodily aches, which are but symptoms of the system's condition.

Get Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery from any medicine dealer to-day, in either liquid or tablet form. Send Dr. Pierce, Invalids' Hotel, Buffalo, N. Y., 50 cents for "Medical Adviser," cloth-bound and illustrated.

Constipation causes and seriously aggravates many diseases. It is thoroughly cured by Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery, one, two or three cathartics.

W. N. U. 1076

But beyond the garden was broken wooded ground, which sloped with a certain abruptness to the world, and the world, at Demberton Manor, and woodland, stretched in a wide infinity of space to the blue hills in the distance—an infinity which gave one a sense of bigness almost comparable to the sea.

From her advantage ground in the window Daphne could see the head in the drive on the far side of the house, and presently she sprang to her feet, exclaiming:

"The carriage has just turned into the drive. Shall you get up from the sofa?"

"Yes." A little tremblingly Mrs. Merivale rose, and it seemed both to her and Daphne as if only a few seconds had ticked by upon the clock before the drawing room door opened, and when Mrs. Merivale's voice said cheerily: "Here she is—very tired and very glad to be at home."

A tall woman in black came towards them with a hesitating movement, and Mrs. Merivale went to her quickly.

"My—dear child," she exclaimed, putting her arms out to the stranger and drawing her face down to be kissed—and only Daphne noticed the little gasp of surprise in her aunt's gentle voice. This is Daphne, Mrs. Merivale said, "dear little Daphne. You know her through her letters all ready, and now you and she must be like sisters."

"Yes—indeed, like sisters," the newcomer spoke for the first time, and as she bent and kissed Daphne's cheek, the girl felt the glow of sympathy and love in a nightmare. The newcomer was so surprising, so wholly unlike what she had expected. This tall, slender young woman was so very different from their preconceived ideas of Denis' widow. They had pictured an old and feeble creature, and clinging—the reality was not in the least like the picture. The real story was beautiful, no one could deny her beauty, but her type of beauty was not what they had gathered it would be from Denis' letter. The delicately fair skin, the deep eyes, the bronze glow of her hair—all enhanced by the dead black of the gown she wore—were striking and very lovely. But it was a woman, not a frightened, lonely child widow, who stood looking from Mrs. Merivale to Daphne with a smile that was lovely.

"How good you are to me," the stranger said impulsively, "how very good. I have all been so dreadful," she added, "the terrible time in Australia, and then the shipwreck. This peaceful place is like a haven of refuge, and I thank you how thankful I am to be here."

To kindly Mrs. Merivale the words seemed touchingly true; and Daphne resolutely tried to thrust out of her mind an intruding thought that they had a ring of insincerity.

"I feel as if I had really come home," the deep voice added gently. "And indeed you have come home, dear Mrs. Merivale," tones rang with kindly welcome. "Denis' people are your people, and from henceforth you will always be one of us. We want you to feel quite at home here, quite that you are amongst your own people who will take care of you."

"An I like what you expected?" the newcomer's voice grew as wistful as her eyes, "I had no photograph to send you, and Denis'—her accents faltered—"I would try and describe me to you. But perhaps I shall disappoint you, perhaps, I have disappointed you already." Her voice shook most effectively over these last words, and in her own mind Nina was saying triumphantly:

"That was a master stroke."

"Dear Denis, don't describe you very well," Denis' mother answered a little shakily, her eyes wandering over the tall figure, and resting finally on the beautiful face, "we imagined you would be very small, and fair, scarcely more than a child."

"To Denis," again came the effective tremor of the voice, "I always seemed little and young. It was his dear way to call me 'little sweetheart,' even though I am not really very little. Will you please forgive me for not being exactly what you expected? I will do my best to be a good daughter all the same."

It was not in vain that during a course of varied existence Nina Mansfield had learnt to use both eyes and voice, and to the fascination of both Mrs. Merivale yielded at once.

"You yourself will soon obliterate the picture we have made of you," she said, "and you will be a daughter to us and a sister to Daphne."

"Only I couldn't ever let or take credit of anything," she said, "and she does was Denis' swift reflection as Mrs. Merivale and the newcomer left the room together. "I expected a little shakily, her eyes wandering over the tall figure, and resting finally on the beautiful face, "we imagined you would be very small, and fair, scarcely more than a child."

"Hugh, I am glad you have driven over tonight. I wanted you to see Marjory. I want to know—how you like her." Daphne was alone on the December evening two days later, when her lover entered the drawing room at Demberton Manor, and drew her into his arms and kissed her gently, before answering her remark. He was tall and dark looking, brown eyed and fair haired, and if there were indications of weakness in his sensitive mouth, the general charm of the man made one overlook any shortcomings. His voice and smile never failed to endear Hugh Brentwood to his many patients, and since his coming to Stanhurst as assistant to the local practitioner, Doctor Barry, the practice had more than doubled itself. His cleverness alone was not responsible for that satisfactory result, though he was undoubtedly a man of unusual ability. But, as one of his village patients put it, he has "a way with him," and it was this characteristic that won the hearts of men, women and child.

He and chiefly contributed to the great popularity of the young doctor. His engagement to the Merivales' niece dated from the previous October, they were hoping and planning that their marriage should take place at Stanhurst, where Hugh had achieved his ambition and obtained a practice in the large town of Radminster.

"Why do you hesitate in speaking of this, Mrs. Merivale?" he questioned. "Does it mean that you don't like the little new cousin?"

"She is not very little," Daphne evaded her lover's question, and glanced away from her face to the glow of sympathy and love in a nightmare. The newcomer was so surprising, so wholly unlike what she had expected. This tall, slender young woman was so very different from their preconceived ideas of Denis' widow. They had pictured an old and feeble creature, and clinging—the reality was not in the least like the picture. The real story was beautiful, no one could deny her beauty, but her type of beauty was not what they had gathered it would be from Denis' letter. The delicately fair skin, the deep eyes, the bronze glow of her hair—all enhanced by the dead black of the gown she wore—were striking and very lovely. But it was a woman, not a frightened, lonely child widow, who stood looking from Mrs. Merivale to Daphne with a smile that was lovely.

"No one could help being sweet to you," he said, "you are such a dear little soul. Perhaps she feels, as I do, what a restful personality you possess."

MADE IN CANADA

GILLET'S LYE

CLEANS AND DISINFESTS

THIS LYE IS ABSOLUTELY PURE, THEREFORE TOTALLY DIFFERENT FROM THE IMPURE AND HIGHLY ADULTERATED LYES NOW SOLD.

Canadian Shells Help in Drive That the Canadian shell manufacturers are doing vitally important services in support of the great offensive campaign by the British, French and Belgians on the western front is indicated by the way in which they are being used to feed the British guns, and the success of the allies depends on the sustained effectiveness of their artillery. Canadian workshops are producing one million empty shells per month and 17,444 shells per day with fixed ammunition. The latter will be increased to 50,000 per day in the near future.

"Disappointed again."

"How now?"

"This fellow told me he was going to show me the beauties of the town."

"Well, didn't he?"

"He meant parks and office buildings. I was prepared to see some genuine loveliness."

Hoax—I wonder where they get their submarine crews?

Hoax—Hoax—but I suppose in the low dives would be a good place to look for 'em.

As Kipling Would Say It If Rudyard Kipling had been going to say anything in verse about a bad carrier or plasterer, he would say:

"He milled 'mid the mortar of mangle-moulding moisture."

"That old gronch certainly had his living room appropriately decorated to suit."

"How was it done?"

"Mostly in fretwork."

When a political party holds a love feast, that indicates it hasn't much of a chance.

What Britain Has Done

American Paper Pays a Splendid Tribute to Britain's Part in the War

The Wall Street Journal gives a very striking answer to the question: What has Great Britain done? It points out that while her navy, her financial credit and a small export trade were all that were asked for by the allies, she has swept the seas of German commerce, placed upwards of a million men in the field, and got another two millions in readiness, has lent her allies more than $2,000,000,000 and has conquered every German colony except the Cameroons. Continuing the Wall Street Journal says:

By her own enlightened system of colonial government the Boers have wiped out the German colony in Southwest Africa, the French Canadians are fighting on the Belgian frontier, the Irish are, characteristically, fighting in the thickest of the fray, and the supposed seditious Hindus and Mohammedans are cleaning up all the German political gains in Turkish Asia. And there is more than this. If it were not for the British mastery of the seas, where would our own export trade be? Even with an unobstructed sea, the trade which our shortsighted politicians grudge to the allies, because Germany is in no position to recover it, would not exist at all. To leave out the argument of the inviolability of treaties and the sanctity of moral and peaceful nations, all the moral issues involved on the plain question of advantage to our present and future interests, can we ask ourselves, with a show of consistency or plausibility, What has Great Britain done?

Do You Think of Safety

Get the Safety Habit and Pass It Along for the Benefit of Others

When you leave your home for your day's work, do you remember that constant care is necessary? Do you, when you arrive at the office, factory or shop, bear in mind your own safety and that of others? To think first of safety means consideration for others; it means lives spared and fewer vacant chairs.

Most accidents can be prevented, but what is each one of us doing to prevent accidents? We must not expect that care will be taken for our safety and never make a thought for that of another.

It is estimated that a man's average earning power is one per annum. Some of us receive more and some less, but whatever we earn each year will be reduced after a serious accident and will be stopped by death. What are you going to do about it? The obvious thing to do is to learn safety and to have others doing their work in the safe way—to point out to the proper officials unsafe practices and unsafe machines—to take no chance if it may seem unnecessary to tell you this, but what of each year's toll of life and limb? Get the safety habit and pass it along as an heritage to the children—Bellet by Ontario Safety League.

Preparing for Spring

Home Gardens and Vacant Lots Should Have Autumn Cultivation

Custom or habit alone explains the fact that the home gardener almost universally leaves his garden plot in a neglected condition until spring. No attempt is made to prepare for the next season's planting.

If the farmer is to follow this system, the results would be disastrous. In the spring he would find himself with wet and heavy land, would be unable to work it and the delay would mean late crops, if any at all.

The garden should be dug in autumn, leaving the earth loose. If new soil is being used, the sod should be turned under a depth of four inches to ensure rotting. Vines, dead leaves or weeds should be burned, and the ashes, together with a quantity of good stable manure, if available, should be dug well in.

The results of attention to his land in the autumn will fully repay the home gardener in the saving of time in the spring and in increased production.

The amount of prize money for officers and men of the navy which has accumulated during the war is said by the Morning Post to be $20,000,000. None of this has been distributed, and the Post makes the comment that purchases by the government of qualified cargoes deprives the navy of prize money.

The Man—If you are so forgetful, how is it you are here? The Girl—Lots of times I remember little things when the big ones escape my notice.

For Rural Fire Prevention

Suggestions For Reducing Fire Loss on the Farm and in the Village

Farmers and villagers should be among the most active of fire protectors. While most villages have some fire-fighting system, few have paid departments. Living isolated from auto pumping fire engines, chemical and other apparatus, and fire alarm boxes, the farmer or the villager must constitute himself an individual fire department. It is in the autumn and winter when the stoves, the open fireplaces and the kerosene lamps come into use that the fire danger is greatest. Eternal vigilance is the price of safety.

Many country and village homes have a "store room" into which, during the cold months, rubbish and debris are thrown indiscriminately. Newspapers, rags, old clothes, etc., constituting most inflammable collection, are thrown into this room, usually the worst—from the fire protection standpoint—in the house. Most villages use the kerosene lamp or possibly a tallow candle while searching in the cellar or store room. The lamp can be put out, a rat runs out and, in the excitement, the light is frequently knocked over and a blaze is almost certain to result. Water is hard to get, pumps freeze up and the farmer or villager is powerless when the fire comes.

During the summer, English sparrows carry nest making material into cracks and crannies, building nests close to chimneys and flues. Chimney swallows, nesting in the stacks, knock the mortar from the bricks and make holes through which sparks find their way to the sparrow's nest. A mysterious fire results, generally on the coldest night of the year.

All flues and chimneys should be examined before the fires are lighted in autumn. Water should be drawn at night and placed in a tub. Water will not freeze. Roofs should be examined and cleared of curling shingles and other weak catchers. The store room should be the most carefully kept room in the house.

Rats, mice and squirrels should be kept out. Lanterns should be kept filled, cleaned and with wicks of proper length. A dirty, short-wicked lantern, and never make a thought for that of another.

It is estimated that a man's average earning power is one per annum. Some of us receive more and some less, but whatever we earn each year will be reduced after a serious accident and will be stopped by death. What are you going to do about it? The obvious thing to do is to learn safety and to have others doing their work in the safe way—to point out to the proper officials unsafe practices and unsafe machines—to take no chance if it may seem unnecessary to tell you this, but what of each year's toll of life and limb? Get the safety habit and pass it along as an heritage to the children—Bellet by Ontario Safety League.

Where wood is the heating fuel, there should be a wire front over the fireplace to stop the sparks. Where coal is used, a wide floor will often stop a threatened blaze. Coal, "snapping" out into the room, causes many fires. The place for a safe place, can and the place for the can is where its sides will not come into contact with wood. Because they do not show sparks, is no reason for believing that wood or coal ashes are not dangerous. Remember that ashes, especially the finer kinds, hold heat for a long time.

The foregoing cautions may seem simple but are frequently forgotten. It is the unusual that often happens. Teachers in village and country schools should educate the children to think of the dangers. One sharp-eyed boy is as good as a fire department.

what's coming to you.

The Government of Britain has taken over all the whiskey distilled in the old country and is limiting the production of malts. It is said that the whole stock of spirits has been diverted to the uses of the war. This means that there will be total prohibition, within a short time in force so far as spirits are concerned. Thus at one stroke has this great incubus been destroyed. And no one will regret its downfall.

Paper beds with paper sheets and paper pillow cases are now being used in Germany by the poor. The material for mattresses and bedding has become so dear that it is impossible for any but the comparatively rich to afford them. The mattresses are now made of strong sheets of paper pasted together and filled with dried leaves of beech and oak trees. These leaf mattresses are said to be as comfortable to lie on as any filled with feathers. The paper used is toughened by a special process, which prevents tearing easily.

A large and appreciative audience greeted the Powell Co. last Saturday, when they put on 'Ten Nights in a Bar-Room'. There were ten people in the cast and their offering seemed to please all those who were present. The seating facilities of the hall are not the best, but we understand that the managers have ordered a hundred new chairs for the hall.

The new English food dietary, Lord Devonport, is going right after the food problem.

The food-card system will have to be introduced into that country if the imports of food continue to decrease at the present rate. Things will be sold by the ounce, instead of by the pound, or there will be so many ounces of meat, bread, sugar, etc allowed daily to each member of the family.

Statistics show

That for the first six months of 1916 there was a big increase in fire losses in Canada.

Your home or place of business may be included in the losses of the next six months.

Better have them insured at once and not run the risk of being left penniless, in case of a fire.

The Musical Eckardts, Swiss Bell Ringers, Vocalists and Comedians, will appear at the Town Hall, tomorrow night Saturday the 13th. As an extra attraction the Eckardts have engaged Miss Grace Beatty, the juvenile contralto, and Happy Dick Coleman, wonderful boy tenor and comedian. The public may look forward to an evening of mirth and melody.

Once again we went to the Little Gap School to hear the Rev. Wickenden and see his Magic Lantern slides, but probably it was a Magic Lantern Avalanche because all signs were obliterated and nobody but the audience turned up.

Cheer up, the Southsiders are going to give a masquerade on the 11th of Jan., in aid of the Red Cross Fund, and we hope everybody will turn up.

Remember the date and come.
